TRADITIONAL CHINESE MEDICINE

The Traditional Chinese Medicine (TCM) has evolved into an own and self-contained medical system in over 2000 years within the Chinese culture. The "Chinese Medicine" means many treatments of external appliance of the stimulus: the placing with fine needles (acupuncture), the heating-therapy (moxibustion), the cupping, the Tuina massage and Qi Gong. A central role plays also the Chinese herbal lore. The individually mixed teas are real medicine and sometimes also strong remedies, so that the treating doctor needs a huge knowledge and experience about them.

An important part of the TCM is the tongue and pulse diagnostics. It is a system, which tells the doctor, where the problem is and which attribute it has. Only after a detailed anamnesis the Chinese doctor decides, which TCM-treatment will be made.

MOXIBUSTION

The moxa sticks are made of different plant extracts. These sticks burn and heat the acupuncture points. Blockades can be loosened and muscular pains can be reduced.

ACUPUNCTURE

At first a diagnosis about the condition of the patient has to be done. This is made with the tongue and pulse diagnosis. The Chinese pulse diagnostic has been practiced since centuries and differs more than 18 different pulse qualities. With fine needles the acupuncture points will be stimulated. This means a positive influence on the regulation system of the body.

EAR ACUPUNCTURE MASSAGE

In the Chinese medicine the ear is a reflex zone, which reflects the whole body. An adequate stimulus reaches the brain and has an effect on the thalamus. The ear acupuncture massage strengthens the body's pain regulation system, breathing and pulse rate.

HEAT SUCTION

Special suction glasses are placed on the acupuncture points. The heat releases blocked meridians and allows the energy to flow freely. This is especially suited to those with colds, backache, sciatica and shoulder-arm-syndrome, neck stiffness and stomach ache as an excellent treatment.

CHINESE HERBAL PACK

After an initial diagnosis of the tongue and pulse, a selection of suitable herbs for each individual will be combined and ground. The ground herbs will be mixed with vinegar to a paste and spread over the painful area of the body. Then a thermal lamp will be placed over the paste to allow the body to benefit better from the herbs. Especially suited to those suffering from problems such as Rheumatism, joint pain, muscle cramps, urinary tract problems and flatulence.
